I. INTRODUCTION

This matter comes before the Court on Petitioner's Motion for Evidentiary Hearing as to Claims 1, 2, 6, 10 and 15 in his habeas petition. Dkt. #40. Oral argument on this motion was held on October 31, 2016. Having considered those arguments and the parties' briefing, and for the reasons sets forth herein, the Court now GRANTS IN PART AND DENIES IN PART Petitioner's motion.

II. BACKGROUND

The following facts are taken from the Washington State Supreme Court, which were relied upon in its denial of Petitioner's Personal Restraint Petition ("PRP"), and do not appear to be disputed:

Melinda Mercer turned to prostitution in November 1997 to support her heroin addiction. She was last seen alive on the night of December 6, 1997,

1 leaving a Seattle tavern. According to the testimony of a friend, Mercer left 2 the tavern to go to Aurora Avenue to make money for a heroin buy. On the 3 following morning, Mercer's nude body was found in some blackberry 4 bushes in a vacant lot in Tacoma, a lot used as a dump site for garbage.
5 Some of her clothing had been thrown on top of her, but other items were 6 never recovered. An autopsy revealed that she had been shot three times in 7 the back left side of the head. Only one of the three bullets penetrated her 8 brain, but it did so without affecting the areas that control consciousness 9 and motor response. Found nearby was a .25 caliber shell casing.
10 Bloodstains on her blouse indicated that she had been clothed and upright 11 when shot in the head. After shooting her, the killer encased her head in 12 four plastic grocery bags. The two outer bags contained very little blood, 13 but blood had pooled inside the two inner bags. Mercer's nostrils and upper 14 lip were visible through small tears in the two inner bags, which had been 15 partially drawn into Mercer's mouth; the holes suggested that Mercer was 16 alive when the bags were tied over her head and that she had used her teeth 17 to create the holes. Although Mercer could have died solely from the 18 gunshot wounds, the oxygen deprivation would have hastened her death.

12 Connie Ellis likewise worked as a prostitute to support a heroin addiction.
13 Ellis had reentered a methadone treatment program on September 8, 1998, 14 and she was last seen alive on September 17, 1998, when she received a 15 dose of methadone at the clinic (a urinalysis taken at that time revealed that 16 she was again using heroin). On October 13, 1998, approximately 11 17 months after the discovery of Mercer's body, a search and rescue dog that 18 was engaged in an unrelated search in Pierce County discovered Ellis's 19 decomposed body 10 feet down an embankment in a greenbelt used as a 20 dump site. The degree of decomposition suggested that Ellis had been 21 killed a month prior, not long after her September 17 visit to the methadone 22 clinic. Ellis's body was clothed in jeans, a blouse, and socks, but lacked 23 any undergarments. Ellis died of a single gunshot wound to the left side of 24 her head. The wound was consistent with a .25 caliber bullet. Her head 25 was encased in three plastic grocery bags.

21 The Spokane County Murders. On the day Ellis's body was discovered, the 22 Spokane County Sheriff's Department learned of the Pierce County case.
23 In a phone call to one of the Tacoma detectives investigating the Ellis 24 murder, a Spokane detective asked, "'Will you just tell me one thing? Does 25 she have plastic bags on her head?'" 52 Verbatim Report of Proceedings 26 (VRP) at 4855. Detectives from Tacoma and Spokane shared information 27 gathered on the 2 Pierce County murders and 10 unsolved murders 28 committed in Spokane County between 1996 and 1998. As did Mercer and Ellis, the 10 Spokane victims had a history of drug abuse and worked in prostitution (all were last seen in the East Sprague Street corridor in Spokane, an area known for prostitution). Again like Mercer and Ellis, the Spokane victims had been shot in the head with a small caliber handgun.

1 Moreover, just as Mercer's and Ellis's heads had been encased in plastic 2 bags, two or three plastic bags had been tied over the heads of five of the 3 Spokane victims. Similarly, plastic bags were found in the grave with one victim and near the body of another, and a towel was found on or near the first two victims.

4 On April 18, 2000, a year and a half after the discovery of Ellis's body, the 5 Spokane police arrested Yates. The police first contacted him in July 1998, 6 after the body of Michelyn Dering was discovered on July 7, 1998, a block 7 north of Pantrol, a manufacturing company where Yates had worked since 8 moving to Spokane in April 1996 after being released from the army. Yates 9 gave the officer his name, date of birth, and address. A second contact 10 occurred on November 9, 1998, when a police officer saw Yates pick up 11 Jennifer Robinson in the East Sprague Street area. Yates told Robinson to 12 say that he was one of her father's friends, and Robinson complied. When 13 asked for identification, Yates gave the officer his driver's license. The 14 officer ultimately let them move on, and Yates dropped Robinson off a few 15 blocks away. Following the Pantrol interview and the Robinson incident, 16 the police learned that Yates had once owned a white Corvette, a type of car 17 that witnesses had reported seeing in relation to the disappearance of two of the earliest victims, Jennifer Joseph and Heather Hernandez. Late in 1999, a Spokane detective interviewed Yates, who claimed he never patronized Spokane prostitutes and owned no handguns. He admitted that he had previously owned a white Corvette and had sold it to a friend, Rita Jones.
The police located Yates's white Corvette in January 2000 and discovered under the front passenger seat the white mother-of-pearl button missing from Joseph's blouse. Bloodstains found in the Corvette matched Joseph's deoxyribonucleic acid (DNA).

18 Following Yates's arrest, the police developed additional evidence. On the 19 day after the arrest, Christine Smith, a former prostitute, contacted the 20 police to identify Yates as the person who had picked her up in Spokane in 21 August 1998 and shot and robbed her in the back of his van. In May 2000, 22 officers searched Yates's black Ford van, in the back of which Yates had 23 installed a homemade wooden platform bed covered with carpet. The 24 carpet, padding, and underlying wood tested positive for blood (later 25 identified as that of Ellis and Murfin), and three bullet holes were found, as 26 well as a spent bullet and bullet debris (containing Smith's DNA). From 27 Yates's house, the police took records indicating that he had owned at least 28 three guns, one .22 caliber and two .25 caliber handguns. Forensic analysis later showed that Mercer was killed with the same .25 caliber handgun used in the murders of Spokane victims Johnson, Oster, Wason, and Maybin and that Ellis was killed with a different .25 caliber gun, the same one used to murder Murfin and wound Smith. Other evidence taken from Yates's house established that, at the time Mercer and Ellis were last seen alive, Yates had been in the Tacoma area, fulfilling National Guard duties at nearby Fort

1 Lewis. From Yates's closet, the police took a jacket identified as the one 2 Smith had been wearing on the night Yates assaulted and robbed her, and 3 from Yates's laundry room, they took a canvas coat that bore a stain later 4 identified by DNA analysis as Mercer's blood. Using Yates's hand-drawn 5 map, police excavated an area on the east side of Yates's house, beneath his 6 bedroom window, and recovered Murfin's body. The semen collected by 7 oral, vaginal, and/or anal swabs from Mercer and six Spokane victims 8 (Scott, Johnson, Wason, Oster, Maybin, and Darning) was linked by DNA 9 analysis to Yates, as were hairs found on Mercer and Maybin.

10 Yates was ultimately charged in Spokane County Superior Court with 10 11 counts of first degree murder and 1 count of attempted first degree murder.
12 On October 13, 2000, in exchange for the Spokane County Prosecuting 13 Attorney's agreement not to seek the death penalty, Yates pleaded guilty to 14 the Spokane County crimes, as well as to two counts of first degree murder 15 in Walla Walla County and one in Skagit County. His statement on plea of 16 guilty did no more than acknowledge that he had committed with 17 premeditated intent the murders listed in the amended information, which 18 had provided nothing more than the names and dates of the murders. Yates 19 was sentenced to 408 years in prison.

20 Prosecution of the Pierce County Murders. On July 17, 2000, the Pierce 21 County Prosecuting Attorney filed an information charging Yates with the 22 aggravated first degree murders of Mercer and Ellis. On each count, the 23 State alleged three aggravating factors and a firearm enhancement. At the 24 time the information was filed, the State also provided Yates with notice of 25 its consideration of a special sentencing proceeding, inviting Yates to 26 submit mitigation material to the prosecuting attorney. At Yates's 27 arraignment on October 31, 2000, he entered a plea of "not guilty," and the 28 court read the State's notice of consideration of a special sentencing proceeding. The court entered an order extending until January 15, 2001, the State's deadline for filing its notice to seek the death penalty, a notice that the State timely filed on January 12, 2001.

Opening statements were delivered on August 12, 2002, and the State rested its case-in-chief on September 11, 2002. The defense rested the following day. The jury found Yates guilty on both counts of first degree murder and likewise determined that, with respect to each count, the State had proved beyond a reasonable doubt the existence of all three aggravating circumstances. Additionally, the jury found that Yates committed the murders while armed with a firearm. After hearing the evidence and closing arguments in the special sentencing hearing, the jury returned a verdict for a death sentence. At sentencing, the court rejected Yates's argument that his death sentence had to be served consecutively to the 408-year sentence imposed in Spokane County. Yates filed a timely notice of appeal.

1 State v. Yates, 161 Wn.2d 714, 728-33, 168 P.3d 359 (2007); In re Pers. Restraint of Yates, 177 2 Wn.2d 1, 15, 296 P.3d 872, 879 (2013); Dkt. #11 at 2-4. In an en banc opinion, the 3 Washington Supreme Court denied Mr. Yates's appeal, and affirmed his convictions and 4 sentence. 161 Wn.2d at 794.

5
6 Mr. Yates then filed a personal restraint petition ("PRP"), raising 25 grounds for relief, 7 including challenges to the juror summons and excusal procedures and claims of ineffective 8 assistance of counsel, juror bias and violations of his public trial rights. 177 Wn.2d at 1. The 9 Washington Supreme Court found that Mr. Yates had failed to raise any meritorious claims, 10 and dismissed the petition. 177 Wn.2d at 65. Mr. Yates followed with a second PRP seeking 11 to withdraw his guilty pleas to the Spokane County charges, arguing that he was improperly 12 sentenced on two of the counts. In re Pers. Restraint of Yates, 180 Wn.2d 33, 321 P.3d 1195 13 (2014). The Washington Supreme Court agreed with Mr. Yates, but ultimately dismissed the 14 petition on the basis that the improper sentencing had not caused him any prejudice. Id.

17 In the meantime, Mr. Yates filed a habeas petition in this Court. Dkt. #1. The Court 18 granted a stay of execution pending resolution of this matter, and appointed counsel. Dkts. #4, 19 #5 and #6. An Amended Habeas Petition followed. Dkt. #11. The Court then granted a stay of 20 this matter while Mr. Yates sought to exhaust two claims that had not been considered by the 21 Washington Supreme Court. Dkt. #25. Mr. Yates filed a third PRP, raising arguments of 22 ineffective assistance of counsel, which the Washington Supreme Court dismissed for his 23 failure to file the petition within the applicable statutory period. In re Pers. Restraint of Yates, 24 183 Wn.2d 572, 353 P.3d 1283 (2015).

26
27 On August 15, 2015, with the acquiescence of Mr. Yates, the Court lifted the stay in this 28 matter and directed responsive briefing from the State. Dkt. #29. After the State filed its

1 Response to the Habeas Petition, Mr. Yates filed a Motion for Extension of Time to Reply, a 2 Motion for Discovery and to Expand the Record, and the instant motion for an Evidentiary 3 Hearing. Dkts. #38, #39 and #40. On July 25, 2016, the Court granted in part and denied in 4 part the Motion for Discovery, directing the State to supplement the record with the 5 proportionality review records. Dkt. #48. The State has since made that supplementation. Dkt.
6 #55.

8 After the State responded that it did not oppose Plaintiff's Motion for an Extension of 9 Time to file a Reply on Claims 5, 7, 8 and 11-13, the Court granted that motion, and directed 10 that a Reply would not be due until all pending motions/issues are resolved. Dkt. #46. The 11 Court also removed the Habeas Petition from the Court's motion calendar, which had been 12 noted for consideration on 7/7/2016, and stated that it would re-note the Petition for 13 consideration after a status conference had been conducted. The Petition remains un-noted 14 pending a decision on the instant motion.
15

16 III. DISCUSSION

17 A. Legal Standard for Habeas Petitions

18 Habeas petitions are governed by the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 19 1996 ("AEDPA"). 28 U.S.C. § 2244, et seq. Under AEDPA, a petitioner is entitled to federal 20 habeas relief only if s/he can show that the state court's adjudication of his or her claim: (1) 21 resulted in a decision that was contrary to, or involved an unreasonable application of, clearly 22 established federal law; or (2) resulted in a decision that was based on an unreasonable 23 determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the state court proceeding. 28 24 U.S.C. § 2254(d)(1)-(2); Greene v. Fisher, 565 U.S. 34, 132 S. Ct. 38, 44, 181 L. Ed. 2d 336 25 (2011).
26
27 28

1 AEDPA creates a “highly deferential” standard for evaluating state court rulings and 2 “demands that state court decisions be given the benefit of the doubt.” Woodford v. Visciotti, 3 537 U.S. 19, 24, 123 S. Ct. 357, 154 L. Ed. 2d 279 (2002) (per curiam). A state court’s 4 decision is contrary to clearly established federal law if it “applies a rule that contradicts the 5 governing law set forth in [Supreme Court] cases,” or arrives at a different result in a case that 6 “confronts a set of facts that are materially indistinguishable from a decision of [the Supreme] 7 Court.” Williams v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 405-06, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389 (2000).
8 “The state court’s application of clearly established law must be objectively unreasonable, not 9 just incorrect or erroneous.” Crittenden v. Ayers, 624 F.3d 943, 950 (9th Cir. 2010) (internal 10 quotation marks omitted). Further, a federal court must “presume the state court’s factual 11 findings to be correct, a presumption the petitioner has the burden of rebutting by clear and 12 convincing evidence.” Id.

15 This standard is intentionally “difficult to meet,” because habeas is intended to function 16 as a “guard against extreme malfunctions in the state criminal justice systems, not as a means 17 of error correction.” Greene, 132 S. Ct. at 43 (citations omitted). A petitioner must therefore 18 show that the “state court’s ruling on the claim being presented in federal court was so lacking 19 in justification that there was an error well understood and comprehended in existing law 20 beyond any possibility for fairminded disagreement.” Harrington v. Richter, 562 U.S. 86, 103, 21 131 S. Ct. 770, 178 L. Ed. 2d 624 (2011).

24 B. Legal Standard for Evidentiary Hearing

25 Evidentiary hearings in federal habeas proceedings are authorized by Rule 8 of the 26 Rules Governing § 2254 Cases. To determine whether such a hearing may be granted, a federal 27 habeas court must resolve several issues. First, a hearing will not be granted where the record contains an adequate factual basis supporting the claim on which a hearing is sought. Baja v. Ducharme, 187 F.3d 1075, 1078 (9th Cir. 1999). If the record does not contain an adequate factual basis, the court must determine whether the petitioner was diligent in developing the factual basis in state proceedings. Id.; 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2).
28

If the petitioner was diligent, the court must determine whether a hearing is appropriate or required under Townsend v. Sain, 372 U.S. 293, 83 S. Ct. 745, 9 L. Ed. 2d 770 (1963). Earp v. Ornoski, 431 F.3d 1158, 1166-67 (9th Cir. 2005). Under Townsend, a petitioner is entitled to an evidentiary hearing if any one of the following circumstances is present:

- 1) The merits of the factual dispute were not resolved in the state hearing;
- 2) The state factual determination is not fairly supported by the record as a whole;
- 3) The fact-finding procedure employed by the state court was not adequate to afford a full and fair hearing;
- 4) There is a substantial allegation of newly-discovered evidence;
- 5) The material facts were not adequately developed at the state-court hearing; or
- 6) For any reason it appears that the state trier of fact did not afford the habeas applicant a full and fair hearing.

Townsend, 372 U.S. at 313; Earp, 431 F.3d at 1166-67. “Because the deferential standards prescribed by § 2254 control whether to grant habeas relief, a federal court must take into account those standards in deciding whether an evidentiary hearing is appropriate.” Schriro v. Landrigan, 550 U.S. 465, 474, 127 S. Ct. 1933, 167 L. Ed. 2d 836 (2007). Thus, “a federal court may not grant an evidentiary hearing without first determining whether the state court’s decision was an unreasonable determination of the facts.” Earp, 431 F.3d at 1166-67. The presence of any of the six Townsend circumstances establishes that the state court’s decision

1 was unreasonable, and the federal court can therefore independently review the merits of that 2 decision by conducting an evidentiary hearing. Id. at 1167. In sum, an evidentiary hearing 3 must be provided if: (1) the petitioner has alleged facts that, if proven, would entitle him to 4 habeas relief (i.e., the petitioner has alleged a “colorable claim” to relief) and (2) he did not 5 receive a full and fair opportunity to develop those facts in state proceedings. Id.

7 Where one of the circumstances enumerated in Townsend is not presented and a hearing 8 is thus not mandated, the Court may nevertheless grant an evidentiary hearing in its discretion 9 where facts are disputed. Townsend, 372 U.S. at 318. In deciding whether to grant a 10 discretionary evidentiary hearing, the Court considers the thoroughness of the state court 11 proceedings (generally deferring to state court determinations made after a full and fair hearing) 12 and the strength of the claim (generally denying a hearing on frivolous claims). See id.

13
14 If the Petitioner failed to develop the claim’s factual basis in state court, the Court may 15 not hold an evidentiary hearing on the claim unless:

16 (A) the claim relies on —

17 (i) a new rule of constitutional law, made retroactive to cases on collateral 18 review by the Supreme Court, that was previously unavailable; or

19 (ii) a factual predicate that could not have been previously discovered 20 through the exercise of due diligence; and 21 (B) the facts underlying the claim would be sufficient to establish by clear 22 and convincing evidence that but for the constitutional error, no reasonable 23 factfinder would have found the applicant guilty of the underlying offense.

24 28 U.S.C. § 2254(e)(2). Section 2254(e)(2)’s provisions apply only where the petitioner’s 25 failure to develop the factual basis of the claim is attributable to a lack of diligence. Williams v.
26 Taylor, 529 U.S. at 432. “Diligence” in developing a claim’s factual basis requires that the 27 petitioner “ma[k]e a reasonable attempt, in light of the information available at the time, to investigate and pursue claims in state court.” Id. at 435. “Diligence will require in the usual case that the prisoner, at a minimum, seek an evidentiary hearing in the state court in the manner prescribed by state law.” Id. at 437.
28

C. Habeas Claims

Mr. Yates seeks an evidentiary hearing on his Claims 1, 2, 6, 10 and 15, arguing that the state court process was unreasonable resulting in unreasonably found facts. Mr. Yates seeks an evidentiary hearing only for contested material facts, or where the weight of the proffered evidence can only be determined by seeing witnesses testify and is critical to the evaluation of prejudice. See Dkt. #59 at 2.

1. Claim 1 – Martinez v. Ryan

On Claim 1, Mr. Yates argues that Petitioner’s trial counsel were ineffective in failing to file any motion for improper venue based upon CrR 5.1, CrR 5.2(a), or Washington Constitution Article I, § 22 in violation of the Sixth Amendment. Dkt. #11 at Section III, ¶ III.1.A. Mr. Yate’s post-conviction counsel did not raise this Claim in his original PRP. As a result, he alleges that such failure provides “cause and prejudice” for what would otherwise be a procedurally defaulted claim. Accordingly, he asks the Court to apply the procedural bar exception set forth in Martinez v. Ryan, 132 S.Ct. 1309 (2012), which held that “[i]nadequate assistance of counsel at initial-review collateral proceedings may establish cause for a prisoner’s procedural default of a claim of ineffective assistance at trial.” 132 S. Ct. at 1315.

Under Martinez:

a prisoner may establish cause for a default of an ineffective-assistance claim in two circumstances. The first is where the state courts did not appoint counsel in the initial-review collateral proceeding for a claim of ineffective assistance at trial. The second is where appointed counsel in the initial-review collateral proceeding, where the claim should have been raised, was ineffective under the standards of Strickland v. Washington, 466

1 U. S. 668, 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984). To overcome the 2 default, a prisoner must also demonstrate that the underlying ineffective-3 assistance-of-trial-counsel claim is a substantial one, which is to say that the 4 prisoner must demonstrate that the claim has some merit.

5 132 S. Ct. at 1318. The State argues that there is no need for an evidentiary hearing on this 6 Claim because the factual record is developed and the Court can make any necessary decisions 7 based on that record. Dkt. #52 at 7-8.

8 Mr. Yates “concur[s] in Respondent’s assessment in a general sense – an evidentiary 9 hearing may be unnecessary insofar as Respondent is not disputing any of the facts that support 10 Petitioner’s claim.” Dkt. #60 at 2. However, Mr. Yates urges the Court to determine if an 11 evidentiary hearing might clarify matters in dispute on this Claim. At oral argument, 12 Petitioner’s counsel concede that an evidentiary hearing is only necessary should the Court 13 desire one to develop factual contentions in the record. Having heard the parties’ arguments 14 and reviewed the briefing in this matter, the Court finds an evidentiary hearing unnecessary on 15 this Claim.
16

17 2. Claims 2, 6, 10 and 15

18 On Claims, 2, 6, 10 and 15, Mr. Yates argues that the state court fact-finding process 19 was patently unreasonable, and therefore the Court should conduct an evidentiary hearing on 20 these Claims. Dkt. #40 at 22-43. Under § 2254(d)(2), a federal court is relieved of AEDPA 21 deference when a state court’s adjudication of a claim “resulted in a decision that was based on 22 an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the evidence presented in the State court 23 proceeding.” To show such an error occurred, the petitioner must establish that the state 24 court’s decision rested on a finding of fact that is “objectively unreasonable.” Lambert v.
25 Blodgett, 393 F.3d 943, 972 (9th Cir. 2004) (quoting Miller-El v. Cockrell, 537 U.S. 322, 340, 26 123 S. Ct. 1029, 154 L. Ed. 2d 931 (2003)); see also Taylor v. Maddox, 366 F.3d 992, 999 (9th 27
28

1 Cir. 2004) (stating that “a federal court may not second-guess a state court’s fact-finding 2 process unless, after review of the state-court record, it determines that the state court was not 3 merely wrong, but actually unreasonable”).

4 Challenges under § 2254(d)(2) fall into two main categories. First, a petitioner may 5 challenge the substance of the state court’s findings and attempt to show that those findings 6 were not supported by substantial evidence in the state court record. Taylor, 366 F.3d at 999-7 1000. Second, a petitioner may challenge the fact-finding process itself on the ground that it 8 was deficient in some material way. Id. at 999, 1001. Mr. Yates makes both types of 9 challenges in the instant motion. Dkt. #59 at 3.
10

11 a. Claim 2 – Guilty Plea Ineffective Assistance of Counsel 12

13 In Claim Two of his Petition, Mr. Yates alleges that his Sixth Amendment right to 14 effective assistance of counsel was violated when his trial attorneys advised him to enter guilty 15 pleas in Spokane County instead of continuing those cases, since those convictions and 16 sentences were then introduced in the penalty phase of the Pierce County case. Dkt. #11 at 17 Section III, ¶¶ III.1.B. and IV.B.1, et seq. Mr. Yates argues that by pleading guilty to 13 18 counts of murder in the Spokane County plea deal, it was easier for the State to demonstrate a 19 common scheme or plan. Dkt. #40 at 26-27. Moreover, the jury was informed that Mr. Yates 20 had been convicted of 13 murders and one count of attempted murder, and was serving a 21 sentence that would exceed his lifetime. As a result, Mr. Yates asserts that his guilty pleas 22 essentially left the Pierce County jury to determine whether he should receive any additional 23 punishment for the Pierce County murders. Dkt. #40 at 26. In essence, the jury knew if they 24 did not give him the death penalty, a life sentence would equal no additional punishment 25 because he was already serving such a sentence.
26
27 28

1 In his PRP before the Washington Supreme Court, Mr. Yates made the same 2 allegations. 177 Wn.2d at 46. The state court denied the Claim, finding that, “Yates cannot 3 show that counsel’s performance was prejudicial, even assuming it was deficient.” Id. The 4 court explained:

5
6 Yates was arrested in Spokane County on April 18, 2000. Richard Fasy 7 was assigned as lead counsel for Yates in Spokane County. In July 2000, 8 the State and Yates began negotiating a plea agreement under which Yates 9 would plead guilty and reveal the location of the body of an additional 10 victim in exchange for a sentence of life without the possibility of parole.
11 Yates has stated that he intended “to admit responsibility for all of my 12 crimes and to accept a sentence of life in prison without the possibility of 13 parole.” Initially, the Spokane County prosecutor and Yates believed that 14 this would apply to all of Yates’s murders, including those that occurred in 15 Pierce, Skagit, and Walla Walla Counties. In mid-July, Pierce County 16 notified Spokane County that it was filing an information charging Yates 17 with two counts of aggravated first degree murder. Roger Hunko was 18 appointed to represent Yates in Pierce County at that time. The Spokane 19 County plea bargain remained on the table. Ultimately, Yates went through 20 with the plea bargain in Spokane County. Hunko advised Yates to plead 21 guilty in Spokane County, but the evidence is conflicted as to whether 22 Hunko merely “agreed with Mr. Yates and his Spokane attorneys,” or the 23 Spokane County attorney “deferred to Mr. Hunko's judgment[.]” In any 24 event, Hunko “did not consider the possibility of seeking a continuance or 25 stay of the consolidated Spokane County cases, so that the Pierce County 26 cases would be tried first.”

27 28 In essence, Yates was left with two options that would serve his stated goals: (1) plead guilty in Spokane County and then face trial in Pierce County or (2) delay pleading guilty in Spokane County until the Pierce County trial was concluded. Both options entailed risks. The risks of the first option – the one Yates pursued – are quite apparent. By pleading guilty to 13 counts of murder in Spokane County before facing trial in Pierce County, Yates made it easier for the State to demonstrate the existence of a common scheme or plan and the evidence of his Spokane County murders was admissible during the penalty phase. This risk was mitigated, to some degree, by the possibility of arguing in Pierce County that equitable estoppel precluded the State from seeking the death penalty.
The first option also provided a key benefit – it removed the possibility of the death penalty for 13 of Yates’s murders. The second option also presented certain risks. The chief risk of the second option was that Spokane County might change its mind and seek the death penalty for the 13 cases it continued to handle. See State v. Wheeler, 95 Wn.2d 799, 805,

1 631 P.2d 376 (1981) (“[A]bsent a guilty plea or some other detrimental 2 reliance by the defendant, the prosecutor may revoke any plea proposal.”).
3 This would have been especially concerning had Yates been convicted in 4 Pierce County, regardless of whether the death penalty was imposed, because Spokane County would have had an easier time proving the existence of a common scheme or plan.

5 Even assuming arguendo that Hunko’s performance was deficient, Yates 6 cannot establish prejudice. Had Hunko investigated all plausible options, 7 he would have been faced with the strategic decision discussed above.
8 Yates has provided no evidence that Hunko would have advised Yates differently. In addition, Yates has provided no evidence that Spokane County would have agreed to any proposed delay or that a court would have 9 granted the delay over the County’s objection. As a consequence, he has not 10 demonstrated “a reasonable probability” that absent the deficient performance the result would have been different. Strickland, 466 U.S. at 11 694.

12 177 Wn.2d at 46-48 (record citations omitted).

13 The State argues that Mr. Yates failed to develop the factual basis of this Claim in state 14 court, and therefore is not entitled to an evidentiary hearing. Dkt. #52 at 8-10. The State 15 acknowledges that both Mr. Yates and the Pierce County Prosecutor sought additional evidence 16 on this Claim. Dkt. #52 at 9. Mr. Yates sought an evidentiary hearing, while the Pierce County 17 Prosecutor sought an Order from the state court directing the Spokane County Prosecutor to 18 respond to the question of whether the office would have agreed to hold the Spokane County 19 case until the Pierce County case was resolved. Id. The state court denied those requests. The 20 State argues that, despite the denials, Mr. Yates failed to present any evidence that he did not 21 have other means to get the testimony of the Spokane County Prosecutor, such as a 22 Declaration. Id. at 9.

24
25 Having reviewed the record and considered the parties’ oral arguments, the Court 26 disagrees with the State. Mr. Yates’s counsel has presented a Declaration in this Court 27 asserting that the Spokane County Prosecutor was unwilling to give a voluntary statement at the time. Dkt. #62. He acknowledges that such evidence was not presented to the state court, but explained that he would have been precluded from making such an assertion in that court because such evidence would have been inadmissible. This left him in a “Catch 22” – he could present the very evidence that the state court then used to find that he had failed to demonstrate prejudice. As a result, the Court finds that the fact-finding procedure employed by the state court was not adequate to afford a full and fair hearing to Mr. Yates on this Claim. Accordingly, the Court grants an evidentiary hearing on Claim 2.
28

b. Claim 6 – Juror Misconduct

In Claim Six of his Petition, Mr. Yates alleges that his Sixth Amendment right to a fair and impartial jury, his Fourteenth Amendment right to due process of law, and his Eighth Amendment right to a reliable sentencing determination were violated when a sitting juror committed misconduct during trial. Dkt. #11 at Section III, ¶ III.1F. Specifically, he alleges that one of the jurors was potentially biased because she was planning to write a book about the case. Dkt. #11 at Section IV, ¶ IV.F.1, et seq.

In his initial PRP, Mr. Yates proffered support for his allegation by way of Declaration from another juror, William Good. That Declaration stated:

During the trial, there was a woman on the jury who said that she was planning to write a book about the trial after it was over. ... The woman was white and was younger than me. Based on the juror’s statements and actions, I believed that she was re-creating her notes outside of court from events inside court so that she would have material for her book.

177 Wn.2d at 30 (record citation omitted).

Mr. Yates requested an evidentiary hearing on this Claim, but the Washington Supreme Court denied the request. The court first recognized the following legal principles:

A defendant is guaranteed a fair trial before an impartial jury by the Sixth and Fourteenth Amendments. Ross v. Oklahoma, 487 U.S. 81, 85, 108 S.

1 Ct. 2273, 101 L. Ed. 2d 80 (1988). This right is violated by the inclusion on 2 the jury of a biased juror, whether the bias is actual or implied. See Morgan
 3 v. Illinois, 504 U.S. 719, 729, 112 S. Ct. 2222, 119 L. Ed. 2d 492 (1992)
 4 (inclusion of a single biased juror invalidates death sentence); Smith v.
 5 Phillips, 455 U.S. 209, 221-24, 102 S. Ct. 940, 71 L. Ed. 2d 78 (1982)
 6 (O'CONNOR, J., concurring) (noting that implied bias may violate a 7 defendant's Sixth Amendment rights). A juror with a direct financial 8 incentive is deemed biased. See United States v. Polichemi, 219 F.3d 698, 9 704 (7th Cir. 2000).

10 Id. at 30-31. However, the court then determined:

11 The State correctly argues that this claim is too speculative (i.e., Yates has 12 not established a prima facie case). Even accepting all of Good's 13 statements as true and giving them a liberal interpretation, Yates has 14 provided no evidence whatsoever that the other juror's intention to write a 15 book biased her in any way. While it is entirely conceivable that such an 16 intention could result in bias, see Dyer v. Calderon, 151 F.3d 970, 982 n.19 17 (9th Cir. 1998) ("[A] juror who ... secretly plans to write a memoir of the 18 experience might then vote differently to provide drama, or he might inject 19 personal prejudice into the jury room in an attempt to jazz up the 20 deliberative process."), it is Yates's burden to demonstrate prima facie 21 evidence of that bias, and he has failed to do so. As such, Yates is not 22 entitled to a reference hearing and this claim is dismissed.

24 Mr. Yates argues that the state court's concession that a juror's interest could result in 25 bias requires a hearing to determine whether it did result in bias. Dkt. #40 at 41. Further, he 26 argues that the state court was not free to reject his Claim without such a hearing. Id. The 27 State responds that Mr. Yates had a full opportunity to come forward with evidence in support 28 of his claim, but he failed to develop the record. Dkts. #35 at 53-57 and #52 at 11. As a result, the State asserts that the state court decision is entitled deference and no evidentiary hearing is required or necessary. Id. at 11-12.

The Court again disagrees with the State. The Sixth Amendment requires that jurors in a criminal case base their verdict solely on the evidence presented at trial. See Turner v.
Louisiana, 379 U.S. 466, 472-73, 85 S. Ct. 546, 13 L. Ed. 2d 424 (1965). In Smith v. Phillips,

1 455 U.S. 209, 215, 102 S. Ct. 940, 71 L. Ed. 2d 78 (1982), the Supreme Court observed that 2 “[t]his Court has long held that the remedy for allegations of juror partiality is a hearing in 3 which the defendant has the opportunity to prove actual bias.” The Smith Court went on to 4 hold that “[d]ue process means a jury capable and willing to decide the case solely on the 5 evidence before it, and a trial judge ever watchful to prevent prejudicial occurrences and to 6 determine the effect of such occurrences when they happen.” Id. at 217.
7

8 Although the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals clarified in Dyer v. Calderon, supra, that 9 due process does not mandate a formal evidentiary hearing whenever juror bias is alleged, the 10 Court also held that 11

12 [a] court confronted with a colorable claim of juror bias must undertake an 13 investigation of relevant facts and circumstances. An informal in camera 14 hearing may be adequate for this purpose; due process requires only that all 15 parties be represented, and that the investigation be reasonably calculated to 16 resolve the doubts raised about the juror’s impartiality.

17 Id. at 974-75 (citations omitted).

18 The Washington State Supreme Court acknowledged that a juror’s intention to write a 19 book could create bias. The state court was presented with a Declaration from one juror that 20 there was a woman on the jury who said she intended to write a book about the trial. The 21 court took no additional evidence, nor did it allow an evidentiary hearing to gather any 22 testimony from either Mr. Good or the allegedly biased juror.

23 Given that the state court acknowledged the desire to write a book could have biased the 24 juror, but then failed to allow Mr. Yates to explore that claim, this Court finds that the state 25 court’s decision was based on an unreasonable determination of the facts in light of the state 26 court record, and that the fact-finding procedure employed by the state court was not adequate 27 to afford a full and fair hearing. See, e.g. Wiggins v. Smith, 539 U.S. 510, 528, 123 S. Ct. 2527, 28

156 L. Ed. 2d 471 (2003). Mr. Yates was denied the opportunity to investigate the juror's actual bias because he was unable to question the juror about her statement, and was thus unable to show if her intention to write a book about the trial had created any bias. See Smith, 455 U.S. at 217 n.7 (noting that determinations made during hearings on alleged juror bias "will frequently turn upon testimony of the juror in question"). That was then used against him to deny the Claim. As a result, this Court concludes that Mr. Yates presented sufficient evidence of juror bias to warrant a due process hearing because the state court's denial of a hearing "goes to a material factual issue that is central to petitioner's claim." Taylor, 366 F.3d at 1001. Accordingly, the Court grants an evidentiary hearing on Claim 6.

c. Claim 10 – Penalty Phase Ineffective Assistance of Counsel

In Claim Ten of his Petition, Mr. Yates alleges that his trial attorneys were ineffective in numerous respects during the preparation, investigation and trial of the penalty phase issues in violation of the Sixth Amendment. Dkt. #11 at Section III, ¶ III.1.J. Specifically, Mr. Yates alleges that trial counsel: 1) failed to object to the State's expert witness Mark Safarick's inadmissible personality profile testimony;<sup>1</sup> 2) failed to investigate Mr. Yates's severe mental dysfunction; 3) failed to competently investigate Mr. Yates's dangerousness if sentenced to life in prison; 4) failed to investigate and present evidence of the victims' reactions to Mr. Yates's guilty pleas; and 5) failed to present evidence regarding the love and affection in the Yates family. Dkts. #11 at Section IV, ¶¶ IV.J.1., et seq. and #40 at 29-41. Mr. Yates also objects to the state court's "balkanized" review of the Claim, arguing that such review is contrary to the

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Yates now acknowledges that an evidentiary hearing is not necessary for the Safarick testimony portion of his claim. Dkt. #59 at 3 fn. 2. Therefore, the Court does not analyze that portion of the Claim in this Order.

1 Strickland standard insofar as the state court failed to examine the cited errors in a cumulative 2 fashion. Dkt. #40 at 8-10.

3 The State responds that while Mr. Yates may not agree with the court's conclusions 4 about his Claim, he cannot dispute that the court actually adjudicated the claim on the merits, 5 and therefore he must show that the state court's adjudication of the Claim utilized an 6 unreasonable application of the Strickland standard. Dkt. #52 at 12-16. The State asserts that 7 Mr. Yates cannot do so.
8

9 In reviewing Mr. Yates's Claim in the PRP, the state court found that Mr. Yates had 10 failed to make a prima facie showing that counsel's failure to investigate mental and 11 neuropsychological deficits, failure to produce certain humanizing evidence, or the future 12 dangerousness investigation constituted ineffective assistance of counsel. 177 Wn.2d at 37-45.
13 In contrast, the court did find that counsel had been deficient by failing to investigate the 14 possibility of having victims' relatives testify against imposing the death penalty. Id. at 39.
15 Nevertheless, the court found that Mr. Yates could not establish prejudice from that failure to 16 investigate. Id. at 42. Thus, the court concluded that Mr. Yates's had not demonstrated 17 ineffective assistance on any of the subparts of his Claim.
18

20 In Strickland v. Washington, the Supreme Court held that a petitioner claiming 21 ineffective assistance of counsel has the burden of demonstrating that (1) the attorney made 22 errors so serious that he or she was not functioning as the "counsel" guaranteed by the Sixth 23 Amendment, and (2) that the deficient performance prejudiced the defense. 466 U.S. 668, 687, 24 104 S. Ct. 2052, 80 L. Ed. 2d 674 (1984). To establish ineffectiveness, the defendant must 25 show that counsel's representation fell below an objective standard of reasonableness. Williams 26 v. Taylor, 529 U.S. 362, 390-91, 120 S. Ct. 1495, 146 L. Ed. 2d 389 (2000). To establish 27
28

1 prejudice, the defendant must show that there is a reasonable probability that, but for counsel's 2 unprofessional errors, the result of the proceeding would have been different. Id.

3 As an initial matter, the Court acknowledges that Mr. Yates has a single, multifaceted 4 claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Strickland stands for the proposition that a 5 multifaceted claim of ineffective assistance of counsel is to be treated as a single claim. This 6 reading of Strickland is evidenced by the way that the Supreme Court characterized the 7 ineffective assistance of counsel claim presented in that case: 8

9 Respondent . . . sought collateral relief in state court on numerous grounds, 10 among them that counsel had rendered ineffective assistance at the 11 sentencing proceeding. Respondent challenged counsel's assistance in six 12 respects. He asserted that counsel was ineffective because he failed to 13 move for a continuance to prepare for sentencing, to request a psychiatric 14 report, to investigate and present character witnesses, to seek a presentence investigation report, to present meaningful arguments to the sentencing judge, and to investigate the medical examiner's reports or cross-examine the medical experts.

15 Strickland, 466 U.S. at 675 (emphasis added). Thus, the Court characterized the state petition 16 as involving a single claim of "ineffective assistance at the sentencing proceeding," consisting 17 of failure "in six respects." Id.
18

19 This understanding of the ineffective assistance of counsel claim as having multiple 20 facets carried through the Court's description of the state courts' rejection of the claim, as the 21 Court noted that the state trial court found that "[f]our of the assertedly prejudicial errors 22 required little discussion," but "dealt at greater length with the two other bases for the 23 ineffectiveness claim." Id. at 676-77 (emphasis in the original). The Supreme Court also noted 24 that, after the state courts denied relief, the prisoner next filed a petition for a writ of habeas 25 corpus in federal court, in which "[h]e advanced numerous grounds for relief, among them 26 ineffective assistance of counsel based on the same errors, except for failure to move for a 27
28

1 continuance, as those he had identified in state court.” Id. at 678. The Court further noted that 2 the federal district court “held an evidentiary hearing to inquire into trial counsel’s efforts to 3 investigate and to present mitigating circumstances.” Id. at 679 (also noting that the federal 4 district court ultimately rejected the ineffective assistance claim).

5 Mr. Yates is correct that, in its discussion of the standards for granting relief on an 6 ineffective assistance of counsel claim, the Supreme Court in Strickland often referred to 7 “errors,” in the plural, causing the requisite prejudice. However, those references to “errors” do 8 not indicate adoption of cumulative error review. To the contrary, the Court had previously 9 characterized the petitioner’s collateral attack as involving a single claim of ineffective 10 assistance of counsel in the sentencing proceeding in several “respects,” resting on several 11 “bases,” and consisting of several “errors.” See id. at 675-78. Thus, to the extent that Mr.
12 Yates seeks a cumulative error review on this Claim, the Court will not approach the Claim in 13 that manner.
14
15

16 In Strickland, the Court applied both the “deficient performance” and “prejudice” 17 prongs of the ineffective assistance analysis to a single claim of ineffective assistance “at and 18 before respondent’s sentencing proceeding,” concluding that counsel’s conduct was not 19 unreasonable, but even assuming that it was unreasonable, the petitioner “suffered insufficient 20 prejudice to warrant setting aside his death sentence.” Id. at 698-99. As to deficient 21 performance, the Court concluded that “[c]ounsel’s strategy choice [to argue for the extreme 22 emotional distress mitigating circumstance and to rely as fully as possible on respondent’s 23 acceptance of responsibility for his crimes] was well within the range of professional 24 reasonable judgments, and the decision not to seek more character or psychological evidence 25 than was already in hand was likewise reasonable.” Id. at 699. Thus, the allegedly deficient 26
27 28

1 performance involved two facets, failure to seek more character evidence and failure to seek 2 more psychological evidence, not two claims of ineffective assistance of counsel, each 3 involving failure to seek one of those categories of evidence. The Court also found insufficient 4 prejudice, because “[t]he evidence that respondent says his trial counsel should have offered at 5 the sentencing hearing would barely have altered the sentencing profile presented to the 6 sentencing judge.” Id. at 699-700. Thus, the Court concluded, “[f]ailure to make the required 7 showing of either deficient performance or sufficient prejudice defeats the ineffectiveness 8 claim.” Id. at 700 (emphasis added).

10 Mr. Yates is also correct that Strickland does not support a “balkanized” review of 11 individual facets of a single claim of ineffective assistance of counsel. Even if the various 12 aspects or facets of counsel’s ineffective assistance in the investigation and presentation of 13 mitigation phase evidence are factually and temporally distinct, they do not constitute separate 14 claims that must be considered individually. It is the entire multifaceted claim of ineffective 15 assistance of counsel in the investigation and presentation of mitigation phase evidence that 16 “‘must stand or fall on its own,’” see Girtman v. Lockhart, 942 F.2d 468, 475 (8th Cir. 1991) 17 (quoting Scott v. Jones, 915 F.2d 1188, 1191 (8th Cir. 1990)), not each facet of that claim.
18 That is how this Court views Mr. Yates’s Claim 10.

21 This Court first finds that the Washington State Supreme Court appears to have 22 conducted an improper “balkanized review” of Mr. Yates’s Claim. A review of that court’s 23 decision reveals that rather than look at the Claim as a whole, it looked at each subpart of the 24 claim, and ultimately determined that there was no individual error on any of the subparts. As 25 a result, it appears to have dismissed the entire claim of ineffective assistance, without any 26 discussion of the Claim as a whole. Thus, Mr. Yates has initially demonstrated that the 27
28

1 Washington Supreme Court employed an unreasonable application of Strickland in the way it 2 approached Mr. Yates's Claim.

3 Further, upon examination of the state court's determinations with respect to the 4 individual facets of the Claim, this Court finds additional errors as discussed below.

5
6 i) Failure to Investigate Severe Mental Dysfunction

7 Mr. Yates argues that his trial counsel failed to investigate his severe mental 8 dysfunction. He objects to the state court's consideration of that portion of his Claim without 9 holding an evidentiary hearing. Mr. Yates asserts that in reviewing the Claim, the state court 10 applied a standard of practice drawn from an unknown and unidentified source, denied him an 11 opportunity to prove otherwise, engaged in speculation about what counsel did and did not do, 12 and improperly conducted a balkanized prejudice review. Dkt. #40 at 32-36. The State argues 13 that the state court reviewed the evidence of the investigation that trial counsel had conducted, 14 analyzed the post-trial evidence that Mr. Yates had submitted, and reasonably concluded that 15 Mr. Yates had failed to make a prima facie showing of ineffective assistance of counsel under 16 Strickland. Dkt. #52 at 13.
17
18

19 In its Order on Mr. Yates's PRP, the state court concluded:

20 Notwithstanding the new evaluations, Yates cannot show deficient 21 performance by trial counsel. In light of the investigation conducted by trial 22 counsel, including retention of appropriate experts, Yates cannot overcome 23 the "strong presumption" of effective representation. Strickland, 466 U.S. at 24 689.

25 While interesting and while presentation of this information to the jury 26 might have resulted in a different outcome, Yates has not shown that based 27 on the information available to trial counsel, failure to further investigate 28 neuropsychological deficits was unreasonable. This is not a case in which trial counsel failed to investigate a category of mitigating evidence, see Wiggins, 539 U.S. at 523-24; Williams, 529 U.S. at 395-96, or failed to take even basic steps to investigate, see Rompilla, 545 U.S. at 382-84 (trial counsel failed to examine defendant's court file or prior conviction despite

1 knowing prior convictions were a basis relied on by state to impose the 2 death penalty). Nor was the expert appointed too late to provide meaningful 3 benefit to the case. See In re Pers. Restraint of Brett, 142 Wn.2d 868, 878, 4 16 P.3d 601 (2001).

5 Trial counsel's duty is to retain qualified experts and provide those experts 6 with relevant information; once appropriate experts are retained, 7 determining what specific tests to perform may be properly left to those 8 experts. Davis I, 152 Wn.2d at 733 ("It was clearly within the "wide range 9 of professionally competent assistance" for defense counsel 'to rely on 10 properly selected experts.'" (quoting Harris v. Vasquez, 949 F.2d 1497, 11 1525 (9th Cir. 1990) (quoting Strickland, 466 U.S. at 690))). Yates's 12 implication that trial counsel should have specifically directed the retained 13 neuropsychologist to look for "deficiencies in temporal lobe functioning," 14 Am. Pers. Restraint Pet. & Supporting Br. at 30, is unavailing. Similarly, 15 failure to retain an expert for the specific purpose of opining on whether 16 Yates possessed a sexual disorder, such a necrophilia, does not render 17 counsel's performance deficient where an expert who is retained possesses 18 the ability to make such a diagnosis. Failure to micromanage the testing 19 performed by experts is different in kind from failing to provide those 20 experts with information needed to conduct their evaluations, which would 21 constitute deficient performance. Cf. Wallace v. Stewart, 184 F.3d 1112, 22 1116 (9th Cir. 1999) (noting counsel's "professional responsibility to 23 investigate and bring to the attention of mental health experts ... facts that 24 the experts do not request").

25 Trial counsel's declaration does not suggest a different conclusion. The 26 declaration does not preclude the inference that although not hired for the 27 purpose of opining whether Yates suffered from a sexual deviancy disorder, 28 Dr. Lewis was capable of diagnosing Yates with a sexual deviancy disorder and, in fact, may have done so. Indeed, such a diagnosis would at least be suggested by the fact that Yates committed multiple acts of necrophilia.
These acts were known to Yates's counsel, and there is no allegation that counsel failed to disclose these acts to Dr. Lewis. Tellingly, trial counsel does not state either (1) that he failed to investigate the presence of the sexual deviancy disorder or (2) that any failure lacked a tactical justification.

Yates has not made a prima facie showing of ineffective assistance of counsel. Trial counsel retained both a neuropsychologist and a psychiatrist prior to the mitigation phase of trial. Both experts prepared reports for defense counsel. Yates has not shown that trial counsel either failed to provide experts with relevant information or imposed any limitations on the scope of the experts' evaluations, much less that those limitations were unreasonable. See Davis I, 152 Wn.2d at 724-26, 731-33 (finding effective assistance where counsel imposed limitations on the work of experts).

1 Accordingly, Yates has not made a prima facie showing of deficient 2 performance based on failure to investigate neuropsychological deficits or 3 the presence of sexual deviancy disorders. His ineffective assistance of 4 counsel claim necessarily fails.

177 Wn.2d at 39-41.

5 Mr. Yates argues that the court's conclusions are merely speculation, and that in order 6 to reach those conclusions, the court either overlooked or misunderstood the evidence proffered 7 by Yates. Dkt. #40 at 35. In particular, Mr. Yates points to the sworn statement of trial counsel 8 Roger Hunko, who stated:

9 10 [W]e did not retain an expert to opine whether Mr. Yates suffers from a 11 sexual deviancy disorder. Further, because we did not retain an expert to 12 evaluate and form an opinion about whether Mr. Yates' suffers from a 13 sexual disorder, no expert evaluated whether there was any connection 14 between any sexual disease or disorder and the multiple homicides. Thus, 15 our failure to call an expert to explain whether Mr. Yates suffers from a 16 sexual disorder and, if so, whether that disorder was a contributing factor in 17 the murders was the result of our failure to investigate.

18 Id. (citing REC 14670). Mr. Yates argues that the state court's speculation concerning 19 contested factual matters should have signaled the need for reliable fact-finding through an 20 evidentiary hearing, rather than by inference and guesswork. This Court agrees. It is not clear 21 from the record that Dr. Lewis was qualified to diagnose Mr. Yates with a sexual deviancy 22 disorder, that he even considered such a diagnosis, or what information counsel provided him.
23 Thus, the Court concludes that the state court employed an unreasonable procedure when it 24 rejected this facet of Mr. Yates's Claim.

26 ii) Failure to Competently Investigate Future Dangerousness if Sentenced 27 to Life

28 Next Mr. Yates argues that his trial counsel failed to competently investigate his future dangerousness if sentenced to life in prison rather than the death penalty. The State argues that the state court reasonably reviewed this portion of the Claim.

1 In its Order on Mr. Yates's PRP, the state court concluded:

2 Trial counsel investigated this issue and, indeed, presented testimony during 3 the penalty phase from eight corrections officers and a records custodian 4 concerning Yates's good behavior in jail. Counsel also presented testimony 5 from the manager of the intensive management unit of the Washington State 6 Penitentiary concerning the infrequency of escapes and assaults. Yates 7 contends it was deficient performance for trial counsel to not additionally 8 hire an expert to assess Yates's future dangerousness. Yates relies on two 9 pieces of evidence: (1) trial counsel's declaration that his failure to retain an expert was not the product of a tactical decision but, rather, the result of his failure to "consider it," Am. Pers. Restraint Pet. & Supporting Br., Ex. A at 4; and (2) a report by Dr. Ronald Roesch that Yates "presented ... a low risk for violence in prison," id. Ex. U at 1.

10 Trial counsel's performance did not fall below an objective standard of 11 reasonableness. This was not a case where counsel "ignored pertinent 12 avenues for investigation," Porter, 558 U.S. at 40. Counsel conducted a 13 sufficiently "thorough investigation of law and facts." Strickland, 466 U.S.
14 at 690. Though counsel's failure to retain an expert on future 15 dangerousness was not a conscious decision (i.e., not the product of 16 strategic thinking) and "post hoc rationalization[s]" are inadequate to justify 17 the absence of a strategic decision, Wiggins, 539 U.S. at 526-27, this 18 demonstrates deficiency of an investigation only if it is not reasonably 19 complete. For example, in Wiggins, trial counsel conducted a minimal 20 preliminary investigation into a capital defendant's life history, obtaining a 21 one-page account of his personal history from the presentence investigation 22 report prepared by the Maryland Division of Parole and Probation and records relating to the defendant's placements in the foster care system. Id.
at 518, 523. The Court held that failure to acquire more than this "rudimentary knowledge" of the defendant's history was deficient performance, particularly in light of the fact that these records contained leads toward potentially fruitful sources of additional facts. Id. at 524-25.
Here, by contrast, there were not additional facts to be adduced by further investigation, merely an expert's bolstering of inferences that could already be drawn from the extensive evidence already discovered.

23 Moreover, even if trial counsel's failure to retain an expert to further 24 investigate Yates's future dangerousness was deficient performance, it was 25 not prejudicial. The additional mitigating evidence counsel failed to 26 discover was largely duplicative of evidence before the jury. Reweighing 27 "the evidence in aggravation against the totality of available mitigating 28 evidence," id. at 534, there is simply no reasonable probability that the jury would have returned a different verdict. This is particularly true because, as the State points out, introduction of the study would likely allow for damaging rebuttal evidence.

1 177 Wn.2d at 45-46.

2 Mr. Yates argues that the court's conclusion is "the very model of unreasonableness" 3 and that there was a "profound need for expert testimony in this case". Dkt. #59 at 7. The 4 Court agrees that the type of expert evidence that Mr. Yates's counsel failed to introduce, could 5 have changed the perception of the jurors. As Petitioner's counsel noted, an expert could have 6 testified that future dangerousness in jail is not the same as future dangerousness out in the 7 community, and only an expert could have proffered that evidence. Thus, the evidence would 8 not have been duplicative of the other testimony presented on this issue. Accordingly, having 9 considered the oral argument of counsel, the Court concludes that the state court employed an 10 unreasonable procedure when it rejected this facet of Mr. Yates's Claim as well.

 13 iii) Failure to Investigate and Present Evidence of Victims' Reactions to 14 Guilty Pleas

15 Mr. Yates also argues that his counsel failed to adequately investigate and present 16 evidence of victims' reactions to his guilty pleas in Spokane County. Mr. Yates made the same 17 allegation in his PRP before the Washington Supreme Court, and the court agreed that he had 18 made a prima facie showing that his trial counsel's performance was deficient based on 19 counsel's failure to investigate the possibility of having victims' relatives testify against 20 imposing the death penalty. 177 Wn.2d at 41-43. Nevertheless, the court concluded:

21
 22 Yates cannot establish prejudice from this failure to investigate. Yates has 23 provided a declaration of one victim's mother who stated that his decision 24 to plead guilty "provided [her] with some solace" and that she would have 25 so testified at trial. Am. Pers. Restraint Pet. & Supporting Br., Ex. F at 1.
 26 However, this is not a case where the jury "heard almost nothing that would 27 humanize [Yates] or allow [it] to accurately gauge his moral culpability." 28 Porter, 558 U.S. at 41; see infra pp. 44-45 (discussing humanizing evidence presented). Instead, this additional evidence is the sort that "would barely have altered the sentencing profile presented to the" jury. Strickland, 466 U.S. at 700. Weighing against this merely marginally beneficial additional evidence is the enormity of Yates's crimes – the murders of 15 human beings. In addition, had the evidence been fully investigated and presented at trial, it would have opened the door to damaging rebuttal testimony from relatives of Spokane victims who were not comforted by his decision to plead guilty in exchange for a sentence of life imprisonment without the possibility of parole. See State's Corr. Resp. to Pers. Restraint Pet., Apps. H, Q.

177 Wn.2d at 42-43.

Mr. Yates argues that at the point the state court determined deficient performance, it should have allowed an evidentiary hearing to accurately assess the impact of victim's mother's testimony, and how jurors would have reacted. Dkt. #40 at 38-39. Mr. Yates further argues that the state court improperly speculated about the possibility of damaging rebuttal testimony, as Washington law provides for the potential of a hearing to determine the scope of admissible rebuttal evidence. Dkt. #40 at 39. The State responds that the court did not merely speculate. Dkt. #52 at 14. It points to Declarations submitted by two other victims who expressed anger at the plea deals, and felt no sense of comfort or closure from the guilty pleas. Id.

The Court agrees with the State that no evidentiary hearing was required on this specific facet of Mr. Yates's claim. Mr. Yates is not persuasive that the state court was unreasonable in its conclusion. See Strickland, 466 U.S. at 700 (no prejudice in failure to present evidence because the overwhelming aggravating circumstances outweighed the mitigating circumstances and the proffered evidence would have opened the door to harmful and conflicting evidence); Campbell, 829 F.2d at 1464 (failure to present mitigating evidence not prejudicial because "given the overwhelming aggravating factors, and, the heinous nature of the crime, there is no reasonable likelihood that the jury's verdict would have been different had the mitigating evidence been introduced," and the mitigating evidence could have opened the door to strong rebuttal evidence). However, while the state court may not have erroneously concluded that

1 this particular facet of the ineffective assistance claim did not result in prejudice, the question is 2 whether the claimed deficiencies as a whole caused prejudice. That question can only be 3 answered after an evidentiary hearing is conducted and the Claim is then reviewed as a whole.

4 iv) Failure to Present Evidence Regarding Familial Love and Affection

5 Finally, Mr. Yates argues that his trial counsel was ineffective in failing to present 6 certain evidence to humanize him. The Washington Supreme Court rejected that facet of Mr.
 7 Yates's Claim, explaining:
 8

9 Yates next contends that trial counsel's failure to "develop[ ] and present[ ]" 10 additional evidence to humanize him rendered counsel's performance 11 ineffective. Am. Pers. Restraint Pet. & Supporting Br. at 36. As a starting 12 point, trial counsel presented numerous witnesses tending to humanize 13 Yates, including family members, high school sports coaches, fellow 14 members of the military who had served with Yates, and clergy and 15 prisoners who had had religious discussions with Yates. Further, Yates 16 delivered an allocution to the jury. The additional evidence collateral 17 counsel contends should have been presented includes Yates's daughters, 18 son, stepmother, half sisters, brother-in-law, aunt, uncle, cousins, aunt's 19 sister, and school classmate.

20 Trial counsel was "obviously interested" in presenting testimony of family 21 members but, after investigating that avenue, discovered that "[m]ost of Mr.
 22 Yates' family members were understandably conflicted." Id. Ex. A at 4.
 23 As a result, trial counsel decided not to call additional family members 24 during the penalty phase. Id. Presenting testimony by conflicted family 25 members, subject to cross-examination, might have prompted the 26 prosecutor to argue that Yates had also victimized his own family through 27 his actions. Counsel's strategic decision is not objectively unreasonable.
 28 See Stenson, 142 Wn.2d at 741-47 (holding that failure to present evidence rebutting lack of remorse was not deficient where counsel made a substantial attempt to humanize defendant).

177 Wn.2d at 44-45.

Mr. Yates argues that the value of the proposed testimony could only have been reliably determined after an evidentiary hearing. Dkt. #40 at 40-41. However, on this record, he cannot demonstrate that the state court's application of the Strickland standard was unreasonable.

1 Under AEDPA, the question is whether there is any reasonable argument that counsel satisfied 2 the Strickland standard, and the Washington Supreme Court answered that question reasonably 3 in light of the evidence that was presented. Accordingly, there was no error in denying an 4 evidentiary hearing on this facet of Mr. Yates's claim.

5 Looking at Claim 10 as a whole, and in light of the individual analyses of the several 6 facets of the Claim as described above, the Court grants an evidentiary hearing restricted to the 7 facets identified as requiring additional evidence.
8

9 d. Claim 15 – Cumulative Prejudice

10 Finally, Mr. Yates appears to seek an evidentiary hearing regarding his allegations of 11 cumulative prejudice under Claim Fifteen. Given the decisions reached above, it is not 12 necessary to hold an evidentiary hearing separately on this Claim. Counsel will presumably be 13 able to develop the Claim after additional evidence is heard on Claims 2, 6 and 10.
14

15 IV. CONCLUSION

16 The Court, having reviewed Petitioner's motion for evidentiary hearing, the opposition 17 thereto and the reply in support thereof, along with the remainder of the record, hereby finds 18 and ORDERS:

- 20 1. Petitioner's Motion for Evidentiary Hearing as to Claims 1, 2, 6, 10 and 15 (Dkt.
21 #40) is GRANTED IN PART AND DENIED IN PART as set forth above.
- 22 2. The Undersigned's In-Court Deputy SHALL contact the parties to schedule such a 23 hearing at a mutually convenient date and time.
- 24 3. The Petition for Habeas Corpus will be replaced on the Court's calendar once the 25 evidentiary hearing has been held and a date has been set for the Petitioner's Reply 26 brief.
